Carmelle makes fresh start

York, neighborhood with an English pronunciation she had not in mind. Although she did not in reality, she said she did not have much use for her money. "You can afford not to be interested in material things when you have money," she said.

In 1977 Carmelle discovered that a large piece of metal had lodged in Carmelle's heart had started to move. Although she had had since the explosion two decades before, this one was different. Following the surgery, a doctor told Carmelle she had 10 to 15 months to live.

For me, that was not entirely point in my life, living was the hard thing, not dying," she added. Having to live each day without a reason to do so was difficult, she explained.

An innate sense of optimism kept her going, she said. "I had health checks, but they didn't work because I couldn't see, and I had a guide dog."

A small child finally accepted the woman.

The assistant manager, the first born again Christian that Carmelle met.

Soon Carmelle began attending the church six hours a day, six days a week. There, she had a full-time ministry, she said. "I was very cynical at the point, so I asked her a lot of miserable questions. I had no cause for a minute. I just wanted to make her uncomfortable," Carmelle confessed.

After enduring three months of harassment, Joy invited her to accept baptism to launch.

During lunch, she said if I would accept Jesus Christ in my heart and sever it, I said OK, and I prayed. Lord Jesus, you can be the Lord of my life, but you have two weeks to straighten this out," Carmelle told her audience.

The cynicism started to vanish three days after the luncheon. Carmelle said she called Joy and asked if she could get her Bible to read.

Joy replied that she had ordered to book six months ago, and that it just had arrived the previous day. Joy also informed her that she could not obtain one of the books in the set.

That Sunday, Joy invited Carmelle to visit a new church with her. At that church, a man met Carmelle and said that God had directed him to give her some tapes. The New Testament. Those tapes contained the scripture that was included in the missing volume of her Bible set, she said.

That was the key moment for her, Carmelle said. Right then, she said she had to choose to believe that this encounter was a conspiracy between the man and her friend or by a sign that God really cared.

"I chose to believe the Lord cares," she explained.

"It was at night that the nightmares had stopped," she said with awe.

"The Lord knows when you have nothing left to give, and he meets you right then," she said.

Ten, then eleven months had passed, and Carmelle was still alive. The doctor explained that the metal was gone from her heart. They theorized that it had passed slowly enough through the muscle that it was allowed to heal.

After hearing this good news, Carmelle vowed, "I decided to give Christ an enemy."

To wage battle of her former lifestyle, Carmelle took a trip to Africa and away her entire ill-gotten fortune. She said she made anonymous donations to the poor and to the hospitals that served them.

"I had to make a fresh start," she explained. "I could not live in both worlds."

Deb's Country Corner

Deb's Country Corner
We're survived Ground Hog's Day, and at least partially recovered from Valentine's Day, and this week we celebrate President's Day. You know George and Abe would be proud to know that the country they loved to melt snow bunnies with a National Holiday. And so it should. Fry your flap, wear your red, white and blue long johns, or take a cherry pie. Take a moment to remember these two distinguished presidents, and say a small thank-you to us. In the tradition of George's reputation with cherry trees, I thought I share a real "cherry" of a recipe with you.

CHERRY CRISP

1 cup flour
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup packed brown sugar
1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup oatmeal, made from instant white bread
3 cups cherry pie filling
Heat oven to 350 degrees. Stir flour, sugar together. Add brown sugar and mix well. Cut butter into four minute oil crumbly. Rub into mix. Add oatmeal and mix well. Sprinkle the cherry pie filling over the oatmeal. Bake 40-45 minutes.

You know, this recipe originally used home canned sour cherries, but you then added sugar, corn starch and such, to make it thickened. But I simplified it. But looking back over the years recipe, I brought to mind the past of canned cherries in my grandmother's cellar. Not a haughty, a cellar. With a dirt floor that was like packed cement, except for the bumps and dips where the ground had packed down. Even if I had light bulb at the end of a single electric cord, with a 12 inch chain switch hanging from the whole thing. You groped about in the dark, hoping you didn't run into too many wires, reaching for that elusive chain to pull. After a few times, you had managed when I was, so you usually went right to it. The cellar was lined with rough wooden shelves, every corner found item in its proper place, grouped with similar items. There were several "tins" of flour supports you had to walk around, that were holding up the enormous oak beams of the floor above you. And most time, I had a lot of green bananas hanging over the corner. Between the bananas, the potatoes in old mugs, and the dirt floor I down those steep ladder steps and entering this world. There were some walls, whitewashed once a year not painted, whitewashed. I am told there used to be several blackboard cracks in the corner. One corner held an empty coal bin, that was especially dark. I am told there used to be several blackboard cracks in the corner. One corner held an empty coal bin, that was especially dark. I am told there used to be several blackboard cracks in the corner. One corner held an empty coal bin, that was especially dark.

Well, let me close with a little household hint. And I sure hope you readers send some of these in, because I only have a few. Deb's Country Household Hint: If you're in a real pinch for a pot scraper, melt up a ball of aluminum foil. It works well, although it doesn't last too long. Found this out not in the last church supper. Unfortunately I found it out because I had KP duty.

Bye for this week.

Saltwork Theatre Company

On Thursday, March 8th, students at the Northern High School 1 am the Brother of Dragons will be presented. I am the Brother of Dragons is an original drama with music that depicts the psychological and emotional toll this adolescent chemical dependency takes upon a typical American family.

Each program is prepared with a step-by-step activities guide designed to help students use self-perception and self-performance. A question and answer period follows each performance.

A special public presentation will be held Wednesday, March 7th at 7:00 p.m. at the Northern Middle School. Presented will be I am the Brother of Dragons. There is no charge.

SALTWORKS is the theater division of the Christian Arts Company, a non-profit, non-denominational, visual and performing arts organization that creates and sponsors events that promote hope and wholeness. The Christian Arts Company, based in Pittsburgh, was incorporated in 1983.

In 1983, SALTWORKS Theatre Company joined with St. Francis Medical Center's Chemical Dependency Program to create programming that would educate the community about chemical dependency. St. Francis Medical Center contains one of the oldest and most comprehensive drug and alcohol treatment programs in eastern United States. The actors from SALTWORKS receive their training on the St. Francis Chemical Dependency Adolescent Unit where they follow the program's three-fold family program of evaluation, treatment, and aftercare.

The Northern Community Task Force was able to bring the SALTWORKS Theatre Company to the Dillsburg area by applying and receiving Grant monies from Pennsylvania Avenue. A coalition for drug and alcohol awareness working for drug free youth in Pennsylvania.
